PROTECTION, TRUSTS AND A GOLD STANDARD.

Trusts are the spawn of the single gold standard. Every trust is organized to protect its business against "following prices" due to the appreciation of gold. Every trust, therefore, is an argument against the single gold standard. Protection and the single gold standard cannot be maintained together. The two policies are diametrically opposed. The former means high prices and the latter low prices, therefore one or both must fall if attempted to carry them out together. The tariff is not the cause, but the bulwark of trusts. Trusts control prices by destroying competition at home; while the tariff shuts out competition from abroad in aid of trusts. Therefore protection and trusts can be successfully maintained together, but does such "protection" insure to the benefit of producers who are not connected with trusts?

The Republican party is the forerunner of high tariff, trusts and the single gold standard. They call a high tariff "protection"—which it is—but only to the trusts, and no one else so long as the latter is permitted to exist, or is encouraged by the party in power. If trusts were abolished or made impossible by judicious legislation, a high tariff might mean what is claimed for it by the leaders of the Republican party. As it is with its trust addendum, the usual "protection" is a misnomer as applied in a general sense, for a high tariff stifles instead of protects all branches of home industry outside of the combinations to which we have alluded.

What the Republican party meant by its cry of "protection" during the last campaign is manifested by the invitation to the various trusts to appear before the Dingley's Ways and Means Committee to "write their schedules." That they will write them high enough to cover their contributions to Hanna's fund, goes without saying. Faith must be kept by these pillars of the party, when they present their "debts of honor" approved by Mr. Hanna. If their debts are not paid, how can the g. o. p. hope to buy the next election? Besides "National honor and prosperity," to preserve while the boodle fund was raised, demand their liquidation with interest. Hanna is so concerned for the "National honor" he is evidently prepared to buy a few more Senators to maintain it.

Mal—Kill the trusts and the single gold standard will die from lack of nourishment. Kill the trusts before seeking "protection" through the avenue of high tariff.

The wool growers are on the rampage before the Ways and Means committee. They insisted yesterday that the election of McKinley had been accomplished by the votes of wool growers, in a half dozen doubtful States, who would have voted for Bryan and free silver had they not considered protection on wool more important than silver. If this protection were not given, there would be a free silver Congress two years hence, and a free silver Congress and President four years hence.

It is reported that in consideration of the fact that William Spreckels did not sanction the marriage of his daughter Emma to Mr. Watson, the lady has returned to him a million and a half dollars worth of bonds and securities that the old gentleman had given her some years ago.

Congressman Bowers in talking to a tariff committee the other day said Americans were peculiar about some things, and preferred foreign wines and fruits at higher prices, just as some of their daughters preferred greasy libertines and gamblers, because they had foreign labels.

An attachment to a bicycle which would enable a man riding tandem to kiss the girl on the front seat without upsetting, would be well received in cycle circles.
